Throwback to Class of 1992

Back in 1992, the first day of school was nerve wracking for one young man. David Lau was then a 28-year-old, and had enrolled himself in the pioneer class of electronic engineering at the then brand new Nanyang Polytechnic. It didn't help his nerves that he was acutely aware that he'd be the oldest person in class. Read more

From Students to Staff! A 25th Anniversary Special!

In this special series (watch out for more to come!), NYP will be featuring 25 of our staff who were once students in NYP! These are a pretty special bunch of people, who can say that they have experience on both sides of the coin. So here are our first five profiles who were quizzed on their student days and this is what they had to say. Read more
